

Ownership of TV and radio stations are concentrated in too few hands. As a result, I hear the same boring songs, and even the same announcer's voice on different stations. News programs are heavy on fluff and mayhem, and much shorter on substance than they used to be. I miss the local personalities that have disappeared since consolidation. We need far greater diversity of ownership of radio and TV. Allowing a few giant corporations to monopolize the airwaves is detrimental to the public interest, and never forget that it is the public that owns the airwaves.
